NATIONAL IDENTITY CARDS

As of June 2007, all Cambodians over the age of 15 must have a national ID card. There are two versions of the card. Cards issued before October 2007 are laminated heavy paper. On the front, there is a dark red decorative border, a digitized picture, biographic information (in Khmer), a national ID number, and a stylized drawing of Angkor Watt temple radiating wavy lines. On the back, there is fingerprint, a red seal from the issuing office, and the signature of an official from the issuing office. After October 2007, cards are white plastic with no decorative border and a photograph of Angkor Watt temple – the other features are the same.
